Introduction

Continental showdown

One of the most recent introductions to FIFA's range of competitions for national teams is the FIFA Confederations Cup, held every four years. In recent times, it has been seen as a warm-up event in the host country of the next FIFA World Cup™, but is by no means a minor competition. In fact, due to the nature of its participants, it is often referred to as the 'Champions of Champions' tournament. The FIFA Confederations Cup aims to give the top teams from all continents a chance to represent their region in a world play-off, and this opportunity – together with the handsome prize money that goes with it – is particularly important and appealing to teams from certain developing football continents.

The History

The FIFA Confederations Cup was first designated a FIFA competition in December 1997 when it was held in Riyadh in Saudi Arabia. Previously there had been two other tournaments in Riyadh, in 1992 and 1995, under the title of Intercontinental Championship.

In 1992, the winners were Argentina, then reigning South American champions. They came with a star-studded team including Batistuta, Redondo, Caniggia and Simeone and carried off the trophy after defeating the host country, despite their tremendous support from the home fans, in the final. The other two teams taking part on that occasion were the USA and Côte d'Ivoire.

Six teams took part in the 1995 competition and this time it was Denmark who took the honours, with strong performances from the Laudrup brothers earning them victory over Argentina. Mexico and Nigeria made it to the semi-finals, while Japan and the host country were eliminated after losing both of their group matches.

In 1997, Brazil promptly stamped their authority on the competition to win the striking new gold trophy. One of the main purposes of the tournament was clearly demonstrated when Australia made it to the final to take on the then world champions.

In 1999, the Mexicans richly deserved to win the cup as one of two teams unbeaten in the group stage to make it to the final. The home "Azteca" factor – Mexico had not been beaten there for 18 years – could not be ignored. Brazil lived up to expectations as their talent factory continued to produce outstanding players.

The tournament also witnessed a standard of goalkeepers seldom seen in a single tournament with the likes of Keller (USA), Campos (MEX), Dida (BRA) and Utting (NZL) competing. Surprise packages Saudi Arabia recovered after a 5-1 thrashing by Mexico in their opening match to qualify for the semi-finals, following a 5-1 win in an all-Arab clash with Egypt. The USA defeated giants Germany only to later narrowly fail to a golden goal by Mexico's top scorer Blanco. New Zealand went home happy after gamely facing up to Germany and the USA.

In Korea/Japan in 2001, a near-capacity crowd of over 65,000 saw world champions France defeat co-hosts Japan with the only goal of the final to win the tournament and complete an unprecedented hat-trick of three major trophies in just four years. But they had to defend resolutely at times as Japan staged a second-half fight-back.

In 2003, defending and European champions France hosted the FIFA Confederations Cup, organising matches in three of the 1998 World Cup stadiums – Lyons, St Etienne and Paris/St Denis. Brazil had to accept an early flight home after the group stage, bowing out of a tough group of strong performers in the shape of Cameroon, Turkey and the USA. The revitalised hosts, on the other hand, won their group. Turkey consolidated their rise as a global football power and only just missed out on a place in the final. The event was overshadowed by the tragic death of Cameroonian midfielder Marc-Vivien Foe, whose team-mates conceded the title to France by a whisker in an emotionally charged final against an equally shaken French side.

Despite the absence of superstar striker Ronaldo from the FCC 2005, Brazil dazzled in an exciting final against rivals Argentina to lift the trophy for the second time. Adriano gained justified recognition as a force to be reckoned with, earning both the adidas Golden Ball and Golden Shoe awards. While Argentina's defeat was hard to take, their performance clearly showed a hint of great things to come with the competition shining a spotlight on the magical skills of their key player, Riquelme.

The competition also displayed German prowess in the shape of a well-organised dry run for the 2006 FIFA World Cup™ and the emergence of a young and promising German team – in particular, the partnership of up-and-coming starlets Podolski and Schweinsteiger – under the watchful eye of footballing legend Jürgen Klinsmann, enabling them to secure third-place in a thrilling extra time play-off against Mexico.

In 2009, for the first time in the history of the FIFA Confederations Cup, the event took place on African soil. South Africa certainly proved themselves capable of hosting the 2010 FIFA World Cup™ and impressively presented some of their World Cup host cities – Johannesburg, Rustenburg, Mangaung/Bloemfontein und Tshwane/Pretoria.

The gripping tournament in South Africa ended with a worthy final in Johannesburg with both Brazil and the USA battling for the title. After a 3-2 victory, it was Brazil who lifted the trophy for the third time.

Basic stats

General

The FIFA Confederations Cup has always been a showcase for matches between teams who would otherwise only ever meet in the FIFA World Cup™, if at all. Japan v. Colombia (2003), Mexico v. Australia (2001), Germany v. New Zealand (1999), Bolivia v. Egypt (1999), UAE v. Uruguay (1997), USA v. Côte d'Ivoire (1992), Argentina v. Tunisia, Brazil v. Greece and Germany v. Argentina (all 2005) or South Africa v. New Zealand (2009) are just some examples.

Derby clashes during the FIFA Confederations Cup are not unknown either. In the 1999 semi-final, Mexico and the USA came face-to-face – the first of only three matches between teams from the same confederation. Egypt and Saudi Arabia, two giants of Arabian football, also battled it out during the group round on one of the rare occasions that the two have confronted each other. The only inter-European encounter occurred in 2003 when France beat Turkey in the semi-final. 2005 saw the first all-South American clash, with Brazil and Argentina somewhat unsurprisingly meeting in the final.

To date, the FIFA Confederations Cup has made stops on four continents: Asia (4x), Europe (2003 & 2005), North America (1x) and Africa (1x). So far, a total of 29 associations have taken part in the FIFA Confederations Cup. The 2009 edition of the tournament welcomed debutants Italy, Spain and Iraq to the fold. Brazil (6x), Mexico (5x) and Japan, Saudi Arabia and the USA (4x) are the most frequent participants in the event, just ahead of Argentina, Australia and New Zealand (3x).

In the eight competitions held to date, South Americans have claimed the title four times (with three wins for Brazil and one for Argentina) although Europe have almost matched the feat with three titles (two for France and one for Denmark). The only other title went to North and Central America thanks to Mexico's win over Brazil on home soil in 1999. Each confederation has been represented in the final at least once. So far, only France (2003) and Brazil (2009) have successfully defended their title.

Two host teams have lifted the cup. In Mexico in 1999, a strong Mexican side featuring Cuauhtemoc Blanco, Claudio Suarez and co. struck gold in front of an impressive 110,000 crowd in the Azteca stadium, beating Brazil in a thrilling 4-3 battle. Four years later, Cameroon forced the French team into extra time in the final at the Stade de France.

Matches

In the 1997 tournament, Australia and Brazil played each other twice. Their first encounter, in the group stage, ended in a goalless draw. When they met for the second time, in the final, the Socceroos stood no chance of putting the brakes on the "Ro-Ro" runaway train, Romario and Ronaldo each scoring a hat trick.

On the whole, European teams have had mixed performances in the FIFA Confederations Cup. Denmark won in 1995, and the Czech Republic (1997) and Germany (2005) made it to the semi-finals, whereas in 1999 Germany were packing their bags after only three group matches, as were the Greeks in 2005 after failing to score a single goal and in 2009 the FIFA World Cup holders Italy left for home following the group matches after a disappointing performance. France, however, managed to present Europe with their second and third titles in 2001 and 2003.

Taking the 1992 mini-tournament out of the equation, only France (2003) and Brazil (2009) have won all their games on the road to their title win. Mexico (1999), Brazil (1997) and Denmark (1995) each had a draw to tarnish their records. France (2001) lost to Australia, while Brazil were shocked by Mexico in 2005.

Brazil have contested the most matches (28) at the FIFA Confederations Cup, followed by Mexico (19), the USA (15), Australia and Japan (13 each), and Saudi Arabia (12). The tournament's most successful teams are France (nine wins, one defeat), Brazil (18 wins, five draws, five defeats) and Mexico (eight wins, five draws, six defeats).

The eight final matches have seen a total of 31 goals, giving an average of 3.9 goals per match (similar to the FIFA World Cup™ final average of 3.9).

All final matches bar one have been decided in regular time. Thierry Henry's golden goal winner in 2003 fired France to their second straight win, thereby avoiding the need for a penalty shoot-out. The biggest margin in a FIFA Confederations Cup final, or in any other FIFA competition for that matter, occurred in 1997 when Brazil steamrollered Australia 6-0.

To date, three matches have been decided by penalties, all involving Mexico. In 1995, they failed to reach the final when Denmark beat them 4-2. However, they kept their cool against Nigeria to take third place thanks to a 5-4 win and in 2005 they again failed to reach the final, losing against Argentina 5-6.

Similarly, in addition to the 2003 final, two other extra-time games have been decided by golden goals. In the 1997 semi-final, Australia's Kewell eliminated Uruguay from the tournament, and in 1999, Mexican fans celebrated Blanco's goal against the USA, securing the hosts' place in the final against Brazil.

The FIFA Confederations Cup has seen several acts of revenge since 1992, but only in 1997 have teams met again in the same tournament. First came the Czech Republic and Uruguay, followed by Australia and Brazil who drew their group match before playing each other again in the final. In 2001, the Socceroos faced the Seleção once more and Australia v. Brazil therefore became the Confederations Cup's record match-up.

Goals

Germany 2005 holds the record for the most goals in a tournament (56), just ahead of Mexico 1999 (55), Saudi Arabia 1997 (52) and South Africa 2009 (44). The highest average of goals per match was recorded during the 1992 tournament in Riyadh (4.5 goals per match), followed by Germany 2005 (3.5), Mexico 1999 (3.4) and Saudi Arabia 1997 (3.3).

The top goalscorers in the history of the tournament are Cuauhtemoc Blanco and Ronaldinho with nine goals apiece. They are closely followed by Brazilian duo Romario and Adriano, who have both lifted the trophy. In third place is Saudi Arabia's Marzouq Al Otaibi, who scored six goals in 1999.

The three members of the legendary Brazilian "Ro-Ro-Ro" trio each have a hat trick to their name. Romario and Ronaldo scored theirs in the 1997 final against poor Australia (who were defeated 6-0), and Ronaldinho notched his in the 8-2 semi-final win against Saudi Arabia in 1999. Besides the Brazilians, Vladimir Smicer did the same for his team during the Czech Republic's 1997 group match victory against the United Arab Emirates (6-1), and Argentina's Luciano Figueroa emulated him during his team's 4-2 victory over Australia in 2005. Fernando Torres of Spain also scored a hat trick in the 2009 edition of the FIFA Confederations Cup against New Zealand in the group stage.

Two goalscorers from Saudi Arabia and Mexico merit a special entry in the record books. In 1999, Saudi player Marzouq Al Otaibi (5-1 against Egypt) and Cuauhtemoc Blanco of Mexico (5-1 against Saudi Arabia) each netted four goals in a single match.

Two goals were enough for Robert Pires (FRA) and Eric Carrière (FRA) to share the Golden Shoe award in 2001.

The honour of scoring the fastest goal is shared by Gabriel Batistuta (who opened Argentina's 4-0 victory over Côte d'Ivoire in the second minute of the match in 1992) and Turkey's Tuncay Sanli, who also found the net in the second minute of his team's 2-1 victory over Colombia in 2003.

The Uruguayans showed a perfect sense of timing in their 1997 group match against the United Arab Emirates, taking the lead in the second minute of additional time at the end of the first half, and doubling their advantage in the second minute of additional time at the end of the second half to win the game 2-0.

In a historical overview, Brazil have scored a total of 64 goals in the FIFA Confederations Cup (an average of 2.29 per match). In second place are Mexico with 33 goals (1.74 per match), followed by France with 24 (2.40) in third. On only one occasion have the Confederations Cup champions failed to crown one of their own as top goalscorer: in 1995 Mexico's Luis Garcia (three goals) denied Dane Peter Rasmussen (two goals) his glory.

The highest-scoring match in the Confederations Cup was in Guadalajara (Mexico) in 1999, with Brazil punishing Saudi Arabia in an 8-2 defeat. There have been seven other goal-packed matches, each with a total of seven goals: 1992 USA v. Côte d'Ivoire (5-2), 1997 Czech Republic v. United Arab Emirates (6-1), 1997 Uruguay v. South Africa (4-3), the unforgettable 1999 Mexico v. Brazil (4-3) final, 2005 Germany v. Australia (4-3), 2005 Germany v. Mexico (4-3) and 2009 Brazil v. Egypt (4-3).

Players, coaches, referees, crowds

Even before it became an official FIFA event in 1997, the cast was already starting to take shape. On the back of Gabriel Batistuta, Oscar Ruggeri and Diego Simeone (1992) came the Laudrup brothers three years later, along with Kazu Miura, Jorge Campos and Claudio Suarez, as well as Nigerians Jay-Jay Okocha and Daniel Amokachi.

Despite its brief history, the FIFA Confederations Cup has already given birth to some household names. Ali Bujssaim, the infallible referee from the UAE, officiated in the 1995 final and went on to referee the decider between Japan and France in Yokohama six years later. Legendary Saudi defender Mohamed Al Khilaiwi also appeared in every Saudi Arabia squad from 1992 to 1999.

110,000 spectators attended the spectacular final match in 1999 – one of the highest crowd figures ever in the history of FIFA competitions. On average, more than 60,000 fans watched each of the 16 matches of the tournament hosted by Mexico, the second highest average in FIFA competition history.
